How You Can Customize Your Hoodies

SCREEN PRINTING

It is the most commonly used method for large format application. Different colours of plastisol ink are applied on the garment through multiple layers of screen to form the artwork. It is economical and efficient for medium and high quantity order. The price varies by quantity and the number of colours in your design.

EMBROIDERY

It is a common method for small area decoration, especially company logos on the left chest of the uniform. Your design is sewed onto the garments using a needle and thread providing a wide range of effects in both texture and thread colour. It offers high durability and high perceived value as a way to elevate your brand and company image. The price varies by number of stitches of the design.

APPLIQUE

Applique is a popular method used by universities and schools on their spiritwear and custom sweatshirts. This application consists of direct embroidery and a variety of optional materials such as polyester twill and cotton twill to generate limitless designs. Although it is the most expensive method of decoration, it provides an ultra-premium look and feel.

DIRECT TO GARMENT (DTG)

DTG is a fairly new technology and is becoming popular lately due to its high flexibility and colourful printing results. It is suggested for low quantity orders that require extremely detailed and colourful prints. It directly prints full-colour graphics onto garments. For example, if you are printing a full-colour image on 5 pieces of t-shirts, DTG is an ideal option.

HEAT TRANSFER VINYL (HTV)

It is an economical method for low quantity orders. HTV is available in single colours. It is commonly used for simple design with minimal colours such as personalize names and numbers on team sportswear and spiritwear. Heat transfer vinyl cannot be used for full-colour pictures or anything with gradients.

DIGITAL HEAT TRANSFER

Digital heat transfer is the full-colour version of HTV and is also ideal for low quantity orders. It is recommended for orders that require extremely detailed and colourful artwork. The vinyl is printed and cut by the specialized printer and then heat-transferred onto the garments.
